City, port strike a deal promoting new Southport growth

The West Sacramento City Council last week ratified a development agreement with the Port of Sacramento's leaders, paving the way for the port's development of some of its 400 acres in Southport and smoothing the path for the planned new Daniel C. Palamidessi Bridge connecting the northern and southern halves of the city.

Also in the deal is the impending purchase of the port's headquarters, the three-story World Trade Center building at 2101 Stone Blvd., for use as the future West Sacramento City Hall. The city currently leases the second story of the building, but will consolidate more city offices there after the purchase.

Port officials expect to lease space elsewhere to meet their office needs.

The building will sell for $1.1 million, and total project costs to renovate it as a city hall will bring the bill to about $2 million, said city officials.

In addition to opening up bridge access to its Southport land, the port received entitlements and a fee schedule for developing the Southport property.

City planners shoot down billiards plan for Riverbend center

■ Billiards center backer says he'll appeal the planning commission's decision, taking his proposal before the city council

By Steve Marschke

The West Sacramento Planning Commission on Thursday voted down a proposal to bring a "family billiards center" to a former court building at the Riverbend shopping center.

"I think (the decision) is wonderful," said Carolyn Leonard, who lives near the project. "We have enough problems there without anything else."

Leonard said she is concerned that the center would bring more troubles including loitering and alcohol-related problems. She disputed that the billiards hall would cater to families.

"Family people are usually working during the day," she said. "All the neighbors are against this."

Leonard and about a dozen others spoke against the center -- championed by Jose Sandoval -- at the planning commission meeting. They also presented four petitions containing over 300 signatures opposing the project, and city planning staff member Steve Rikala said he had also received about 19 letters opposing the billiards center.

"A lot of people indicated they were not opposed to the pool hall per se, but they were just opposed to the location," said Rikala.

The billiards center needed a conditional use permit to operate, and the planning commission voted "no" without any dissent.

Sandoval, the would-be billiards center operator, said he was at first very discouraged by the rejection but that his spirits have since been buoyed by the number of businessmen and customers in the area who have expressed their support for the project. He said he would appeal the planning commission's decision.

By paying a $100 fee and filing the appeal within 15 days of Thursday's decision, the pool hall vote will then go before the West Sacramento City Council.

"I know there are a lot of people who want this," said Sandoval. "We need this recreation center. I was disappointed in a lot of the people's comments, and I feel like it was really not

'Gang house' closed

On Friday, the West Sacramento police combined with units of the city's code enforcement and building inspection programs to condemn a residence at 200 5th St. in West Sacramento.

"This residence was the focus of drug and gang activity complaints from the surrounding neighborhood," said a press release from Lt. Dave Farmer of the W.S.P.D. "During the inspection, approximately 12 individuals, both male and female, between the ages of 16 and 21 years, were contacted inside the residence. The majority of these subjects were identified as residents of Stocton and associated with . . . (an Asian-American) street gang."

One minor was arrested on a parole violation. The residence was found to be unfit for habitation, and was boarded up.

The police press release identified the condemnation as an example of the department's "Community Oriented and Problem Solving Policing" program.

Third housing project nearly done

■ Development decisions and litigation resulting from Lighthouse project and the city's takeover of the old Vacation Inn have led to obligations to build hundreds of low income residences

By Steve Marschke

The city's third legally-mandated housing project since 1994 is expected to begin accepting tenants next month. But the end is not yet in sight for the creation of new low-income housing, as the city's redevelopment agency and the stalled Lighthouse development project remain obligated to create another 148 units of housing, including 76 units to replace a Yolo County Housing Authority project scheduled for destruction.

Already on line are:

■ The West Capitol Courtyards Project, at 2455 West Capitol Ave., which opened in November of 1994. The complex includes 40 units of "very low" income housing, 10 units of "low" income housing, and 5,300 square feet of commercial storefront space. The first of the projects sponsored by the new, non-profit West Sacramento Housing Development Corporation (WSHDC), the gated project had no problem finding residential tenants.

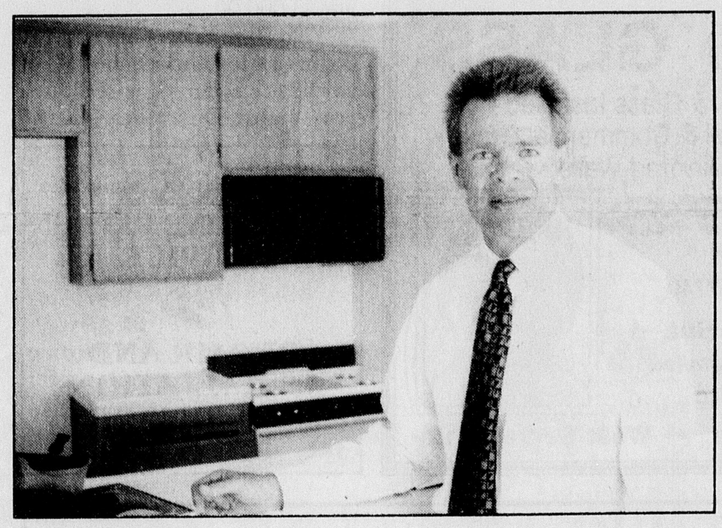

Filling the commercial space has been more troublesome, said Tom Kigar, executive director of the housing corporation.

Togo's sandwich shop now occupies one portion of the storefront, and the housing corporation occupies another. A third tenant -- the "Circa 2000" hair salon -- will be relocating from another city commercial center near Jefferson and West Capitol.

West Capitol Courtyards was built from various grants and funding sources to meet part of the requirement of a legal settlement by residents whose housing was affected by the Lighthouse project in Broderick (northeastern West Sacramento).

SUE McGOWAN, chair of the West Sacramento Housing Development Corporation, joins ANNETTE CARSNO (Property Administrator for the John Stewart Company, a property management firm) and DAN RAMOS, a partner in St. Anton Partners, at the site of the nearly-finished Washington Courtyards housing project.

TOM KIGAR, executive director of the West Sacramento Housing Development Corporation, in the kitchen of a soon-to-be occupied single bedroom unit at the Washington Courtyards complex.

■ Holly Courts, which opened after much controversy among its neighbors in the Maple/Holly street area north of West Capitol, provides 25 more housing units to meet the same legal settlement.

With Holly Courts, the housing development corporation found demand for new affordable income among West Sacramentans starting to wane, said Tom Kigar, executive director of the WSHDC.

New, and now in the final stages of construction is:

■ The Washington Courtyards Project, expected to begin renting next month.

Washington Courtyards will offer 90 units of housing to meet the "inclusionary housing" requirements of the Lighthouse development, which is inside a state-authorized "redevelopment" area.

The project includes 76 units of "very low" income housing and 14 of "low" income housing. The $8.3 acre project is located on 3.67 acres at 500 7th St.

A special feature of the Washington Courtyards project will be $300,000 in state assistance to provide subsidized housing for six units to be rented to the developmentally challenged.

Rents on these units will be held to $195 per month.

"That type of tenant will typically be somebody with mental retardation or autopsy or epilepsy," said Kigar. "A contract with (Woodland-based) Summer House or some other non-profit entity will provide services for them like help in shopping."

More housing remains on the drawing boards.

Plans to convert the old Vacation Inn on Merkley Ave. to a senior housing facility have taken a detour, with the ex-

Arrested: stolen car?

At gunpoint on Wednesday afternoon, police took a man and a woman into custody after the 1993 Nissan Altima they were in was reported as a stolen car.

The pair's identity and other details could not immediately be confirmed, but the couple may have been from the Bell Gardens area.

The incident occurred on Merkley Ave. east of Westacre Rd., in a parking lot near the Low Cost Liquor store.

CORRECTION: info missing from 'molester' article

An article on child molesters in last week's News-Ledger was inadvertantly "clipped off" and did not continue on another page as stated. The information in the last portion of the article follows:

Anyone wishing to learn the identity of the two "high risk" child molesters living in West Sacramento must sign a statement acknowledging that they will use the information only to protect a child at risk.

They may not photocopy the information or document it, and cannot use it to harass or discrimate against the "high risk" molesters.

Violations could bring punishment of fines or jail time. Anyone using information from the directory to commit a felony could draw five years in prison in addition to other punishment for the crime.

Anyone interested in the information must be able to state a safety-related reason for viewing it, and present a driver's license or ID card.

"You will then be looking at photographs of the subjects," said Cox. "You will see a picture, name, description, and list of

Why not solve bridge problem the easy way?

T.J. Smoot

One morning last winter I was motoring along eastbound Stone Blvd. and came upon an accident on Jefferson Blvd., just north of the barge canal bridge. As I stopped behind a small truck, I spied an ambulance, some black and white police cars, a really impressive firetruck dousing down spilled gasoline, and a bunch of teens standing around hugging each other. Naturally, like any other red-blooded American rubbernecker, I craned my neck out the window to investigate. Fortunately for the parties involved, it was merely a fender bender, and apparently all parties were well. And the teens had a very nice time hugging each other, thank you very much.

But the traffic was backing up in all directions....

Slowly, the southbound lane began to move (which was where I was headed). So, seizing the moment, I pushed my tiny coupe into a tortuous three-point turn and zipped around some side streets until I made a right turn on Jefferson. "Alright!" I thought smartly, "I'll be on my way while everyone else less intelligent than I will have to wait." Well, two seconds later, the authorities promptly halted all the cars in front of me to allow the northbound traffic to pass.

So I waited...and I waited...and I waited. In my waiting, I slipped away into a serendipitous revery about the wonderfulnessment of this two-lane bridge clogging up from a teensy weensie fender bender. Then three shiny cars zoomed past me to the accident site. They were all Crown Victorias. My first thought was that they might be Caltrans vehicles.

But these sedans weren't Sunkist orange. Then I thought they might be firechiefs. But knowing that you can only have one chief, and that each chief has to drive a fire-engine-red sedan (some law of nature, I think), I changed my mind. Now, these were obviously City vehicles because the license plate frames read, "West Sacramento, The Premier City." And after noting one driver popping out of his sedan to direct traffic, I deduced that these guys in slacks, white shirts and ties were not copy salesmen (as I was beginning to conclude), but most likely detectives from the WSPD.

But those cars...I just stared. If lusting after a car was one of the seven deadly sins, I was 100%, absolutely guilty, three times over. One sedan was teal and two were midnight blue. And they were shiny...even in cloudy weather. Whew! I licked my chops. I didn't think about how much they cost. All I thought was a whiny, "I WANT ONE!"

Well anyway, back to my story. After I got moving again and over my lust-attack, I passed the mile-long line of cars waiting to head north over the bridge. Suddenly, "Pork" came to mind. Now I know Vic Fazio is supposed to live somewhere around here since he claims West Sacramento as his home, but his presence was just not felt that morning. We need some of his political muscle. I'm really at a loss why we have to keep that bridge operational. I've never seen it up, and I've never seen any barges going through. There's gotta be some federal law that mandates its existence. BUT I also know that this is an election year, and things can get done quickly. The backflips to build the Parmesan Bridge are fine and dandy (I still think it'll ruin traffic on Park Avenue), but it doesn't do a whole heck of a lot to relieve the Jefferson Boulevard traffic. Why dance with the developers and the Port when all we have to do is call on our homeboy, Vic?

Now I have it on good account that this Democrat, like all good Democrats, is powerful and noble, always thinking how to ease the pain of his constituents by giving them money. Well, money is O.K. and all, but more importantly, we need some good ol' fashion Pork Power! Let Mr. Fazio rip open his starched shirt, display the "F" for "Fantastic" and hop right into his "Tinker-Bill" costume. He could "bink" the bridge with one graceful wave of his magic wand, and "Poof!" We could have some kind of federal authority to fill in that canal with dirt, say "sayonara" to that grated, metal traffic hazard, and build a very cost-effective 16-lane bridge!

"FLASH!" Excuse me. I just received some insight from the Muses. ...Uhhh. O.K. I now know what we could do. Let's gather a bunch of concerned citizens, lash ourselves to the bridge uprights and yell, "WHAT DO WE WANT? DIRT!---TO FILL IN THE CANAL! WHEN DO WE WANT IT? NOWW!" If that doesn't work, we could chant this mantra, "HECK NO! BARGES DON'T GO! BUT CARS GO BYE-BYE TO AND FRO!" It works at the Capitol. Maybe it'll work here.

specific crimes of the individual."

Anyone interested in viewing the directory may call Lt. Dave Farmer, 372-2461.

Sgt. Mike Purdum said that in addition to any supervision required by a parole department or probation department, local sex-crime parolees and probationers are subject to increased scrutiny by the police department.

"What does happen on these kinds of individuals is that the detectives and patrol officers are given flyers on them," he said. "If they're out and about, and a police officer sees them, the officer is going to make contact."

But contact between the police and the individuals is not on a regular schedule, although regular supervision is handled by parole and probation officers.

"They're only required to register with us once, and if they move, they register again," said Purdum.

isting building now planned for destruction, said Tina Gontarski, Assistant Director of Housing with the city redevelopment agency.

A new building including 80 units of senior citizens' residences is slated to go up in its place. Federal funding, including money from the Housing and Urban Development Department, is hoped to help pick up the tab.

As part of a lawsuit involving residents at that project, an additional 60 units of family housing must be constructed by the agency, above and beyond those 80 units.

While the agency is also pursuing a grant to study the possibility of rehabilitating existing apartments, it is not clear whether the new housing being built is needed for existing city residents.

"I don't think I have enough data on that right now," said Gontarski, adding that such data may become available in the next few months.

Kigar, of the WSHDC, said that with three projects coming on line in less than two years, filling the new apartment units has become a problem. His agency has even resorted to courting the tenants of private city landlords, and has marketed across the river.

This has drawn complaints from at least a few local landlords, upset at seeing their tenants bolt for the new projects.

"Why are we marketing them as aggressively as we do?," asked Kigar. "We knew these were going to be built (because of legal obligations), and we're the best ones to build them and manage them. So to make the project a success, we need to fill the units. We've even done direct mail to renters, sending out 2,000 fliers, but we only did that after our first efforts."

Kigar said it has been harder to fill the units as more of them come on line. Washington Courtyard's rents, which at $450 per month for a two bedroom unit may be slightly higher than some private complexes, may also be a factor. But it could also be that more units are currently being built than are being demanded.

"West Capitol Courtyards was the first one, and they came pretty easy," said Kigar. "Holly Courtyards took a little longer to fill. Washington Courtyards is more difficult."

Legal requirements and lawsuit settlements call for the new units.

But Kigar said his corporation's board of directors would like to see another direction pursued vigorously now that the first new housing projects are complete.

"Our board has definitely decided that our best efforts are towards acquiring existing units and rehabilitating them, bringing them up to standards," he said.

Kigar also hopes to form a local chapter of the California Apartment Association (CAA), with all area landlords working together. Members would agree to hold their units up to current standards, to allow inspections by a group of volunteers, to perform walk-through inspections with tenants at the beginning and end of a lease, and to provide written rental agreements.

They would also agree to exchange information on problem tenants, instead of simply allowing troublemakers to shuffle around between one apartment and another in the city.

"We would like a coalition of landlords," said Kigar. "One aspect of this is that we'd all be members of the CAA, and we'd publish a list among ourselves of tenants with bad records."

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial

Choices & consequences

The decisions we, as a city, made while pursuing the Lighthouse Project (back when it still had a marina) and the city takeover of the crime-troubled Vacation Inn, have led us down an interesting path.

That path has not included finishing those projects.

It has included several lawsuits and a requirement to build (through a combination of private and public money) several new housing projects -- all of which are a credit to the community.

But are we building too many new units? Should we be able to turn some of this effort to rehabilitating existing rental housing, instead of creating more rooms and possibly attracting additional low-income residents from outside areas?

If so, it doesn't matter right now -- the new construction is still required by law, as a product of our earlier actions.

But while this city benefits from more decent places to live, at some point there could be too much of a good thing. We already have a high component of citizens who are poor and/or on government assistance. While it would be a great thing to help them upgrade their living conditions, it would not be great for the city's economic health to have so many low-income units on the market that we are attracting more people living at the subsistence level.

A healthy city needs a balance of incomes; we are currently out of balance.

Perhaps there are some lessons to learn from our eagerness to jump into the Lighthouse and Vacation Inn projects.

Revitalizing motels

Last week's "City must help motels and hotels revitalize the (West Capitol Ave.) strip:" our leaders must bear in mind several factors, including:

1) West Capitol Avenue is no longer "Business (Highway) 80, much less the only route it once was between San Francisco and Sacramento; 2) Considering the high percentage of motel rooms now occupied by SSI recipients -- who receive roughly $70/month more for living in units without kitchens, but are often charged over $500/month -- it's no wonder the SSI'ers are broke by the 7th or 10th of the month. Gov. Wilson seeks elimination of this "California only" bonus for living in non-kitchen units, and I fully support this move;

3) If developers can be owners/partners of "non-profit organizations" to operate new, affordable apartment unit complexes, why can't present motel owners get together with City come up with a plan for more of such up-to-date units?

In exchange for City's financial and other help, present owners of motels and hotels should agree to the inevitable: Replace outdated units and make way for a revitalized West Capitol Avenue with new types of businesses, or those which West Sacramentans now go across the river to patronize. How attractive a change we can make for West Capitol Ave. will determine how attractive it will be for our local economy;

4) Like Sacramento's "K-Street electric bus," if we had one for West Capitol Avenue., we could have bike lanes for all of our main street -- if preceded by one or more newly-located hotel/motels accommodated by adequate parking and turn-around space for today's larger tractor/trailer combos.

But as for those who measure us by our money alone, they would seem likely to let themselves be ruled by one interest.

Con-men victimize local woman

An elderly woman was conned out of a "substantial" amount of money near the Merkley Ave. post office at about noon last Wednesday, according to the West Sacramento Police Department.

The victim was contacted by a man claiming to be South Africa on Merkley Ave., and the man told her he had inherited a large sum of money from his uncle's estate, but could only take a portion of the money back to his country with him.

He told the victim he would give her some money to distribute to the needy, but only if she could show him some of her own money to prove she wasn't destitute, and wouldn't be tempted to keep it for herself.

The victim obliged, and handed over her money. A second accomplice joined the first suspect and they fled with the woman's money.

One suspect is described as a black male about 5' 9" tall, 150 pounds, wearing a brown hat, white shirt, black tie, black pants, and black shoes, and speaking with an accent.

The second is described as a black male, 5' 7" tall, 140 pounds, with a light-colored jacket, black tie, white shirt, black pants and thin moustache.

The two were seen with an older model, faded light blue BMW car.

Anyone with information is asked to call the police investigations unit at 373-5870.

"Crimes of this nature and of a similar nature occur after the suspect gains the confidence of the victim and the victim gives up something, usually money, while expecting something in return," said a statement from the police department. "The victims are commonly elderly."

Residents back new restrictions on mining

Environmental-minded Yolo County residents have begun circulating petitions to prohibit deep mining of gravel in the county's western reaches. Industry representatives have already begun a counter-campaign designed to keep residents from signing the petition.

Backers hope that, if they can get the necessary 4,000 signatures, the measure will make it on the November county ballot.

The measure, in part, would prohibit deep mining (saying it would threaten groundwater) and would mandate the restoration of habitat destroyed by future mining operations.

The victim has been identified as Rebecca Lorne Tousignant.

An autopsy was scheduled for Tuesday afternoon.

enough to turn us down."

Sandoval said a lot of people who commented on his project didn't seem to understand his project -- including the facts that it will be open, well-lighted, visible from the street, and adjacent to a security office.

He defended the "family" nature of the enterprise, saying "people can come down with their son or whatever and have a sandwich and have a good time."

He also criticized a police report which opposed his project, saying that "they listed a lot of problems (near a previous billiards hall owned by Sandoval) that had nothing to do with the billiards center."

Jeff Henry, vice chairman of the planning commission, said he felt good about the 5-0 vote turning down the permit.

"Everything over there is moving in the right direction," said Henry. "We don't need another hangout. The community is so tight over there. I was really impressed by (their comments). They want their neighborhood back and they're going to take it back."
